Facebook platform along with SocialVibe to help in the fight against women's cancer.

"All us guys, dudes and bromigos are getting' off our lazy butts and making appointments for our beloved ladies to meet with this bad boy, the mammogram machine or, as I like to call her, the boob saver 5k," "Dr. Jack Black" states in his webisode, before going under the machine in an "attempt" to give himself a breast examination.

NFF's Men for Women Now campaign targets men by urging them to support the women in their lives through a pledge that includes healthy eating, regular exercise, no smoking, self breast exams and scheduling appointments for a mammogram and pap smear.

But Black isn't the only one using his star status as an excuse to "bust" out. Kevin Connolly, Bob Saget and Zach Galifianakis also co-wrote and starred in their own Webisodes.

"Facebook isn't about faces, it's about boobs," Connolly said. "Ladies go there to show them off and men go there to check them out. It should be called boob book."

Saget also offers to give women "free pap smears door-to-door"...

Jack Black Gives Himself a Mammogram

Jack Black is using his comedic gifts for a good cause - expanding the Noreen Fraser Foundation's (NFF) Men for Women Now campaign onto the
